

THE UNIVERSITY OF TAMPA SYKES COLLEGE OF BUSINESS LEARN MORE
 MBA | M.S. in Marketing, Accounting and Finance | Nonprofit Management

An unexpected lesson in U.S. citizenship

By Penny Musco

Posted 3d 5h ago | 63 | 6 | Share

When I served as artist-in-residence at Homestead National Monument of America in Nebraska, the most I hoped for was plenty of time to write, surrounded by the blissful solitude of nature. What I didn't expect was a lesson on citizenship.

The first week I arrived at this National Park Service locale, I was invited to attend a naturalization ceremony. When I walked into Homestead's Education Center before the proceedings began, the room was filled with people of different races, languages and dress. The ceremony would be conducted in English, of course, but I heard a conversation in Spanish behind me, and one in Vietnamese to my left. As the woman from Citizenship and Immigration Services read the roll call, I counted 21 countries represented covering four continents.

"How fitting that this ceremony is here," Mark Engler, the park superintendent, said to the guests, "because Homestead represents the opportunity of America." The Homestead Act of 1862, he reminded us, not only offered 160 acres of land to citizens, but also to those who intended to become citizens. This law paved the way for millions of immigrants to take hold of the American dream and provide a better future for their children. The new citizens, he said, now shared that dream and future.

The presiding judge, William Riley, also noted it was National Constitution Day, a time to reflect on our government's fundamental document, one whose importance could be summed up in its first three words:

"We the people." It was a phrase, Riley said, embodying all the hard-won rights available to every American, as well as the accompanying responsibilities. Addressing the inductees, the judge proclaimed, "By taking your oath of citizenship, you become part of 'We the people,' and full participants in our representative republic."

Then it was time for the swearing in. The oath is somewhat old-fashioned, but I soon realized I had never heard it because I had never had to recite it. Unlike these immigrants, I had done nothing to gain my citizenship. They filled out scads of paperwork, paid a fee, studied U.S. history and government, and took a test to become Americans. As I congratulated the new citizens, I realized how I took for granted the privileges they had worked so hard to attain, which I had bestowed on me at birth. But I won't anymore, not after experiencing the joy of those who earned it. For I, too, am "we the people," and it's up to me to keep it that way.

Penny Musco is a freelance writer in Montclair, N.J.

Videos you may be interested in

Raw Video: Strauss-Kahn leaves apartment

Raw Video: Car bomb explosion hits officer

1 Trick to Relieve Joints EverydayLifestyles.cc

Powered by Taboola More videos

Welcome back to the Gulf.

Find out more at bpamerica.com

Most Popular

Stories

- Silence fuels speculation in case of missing...
- Anthony weeps as prosecutor calls her liar
- Dead woman discovered after months in foreclosed...

Videos

- Casey Anthony weeps as prosecutor calls her liar
- Prince Albert, Charlene wed again
- Exxon oil spill in Mont. prompts evacuations

Photos

- Editorial Cartoons
- Rural India powered by solar energy
- The week in pictures

Most Popular E-mail Newsletter

Sign up to get:

Top viewed stories, photo galleries and community posts of the day

Most popular right now:
 Prince Albert, bride go EV in topless Royal Wedding Lexus

Sign up for USA TODAY E-mail newsletters